

7-Eleven opens in June its first location inside an airport

Convenience store chain 7-Eleven has seen the opening of the first U.S. airport terminal locations which is in the pre-security arrivals level of the Los Angeles airport terminal, the company said in a June press release.

"Just as with every 7-Eleven, we customize and cross-check each store's product mix to offer what our customers want. Travelers and those in the travel industry have needs for products you might not find at a neighborhood 7-Eleven. Whether they are arriving at their final destination or in the middle of a work shift, we look forward to serving the thousands who come through Tom Bradley International Terminal every day," a company statement said.

A hot dog will be priced at $2.11, the company said, adding that the station was also designed to be accessible to airport employees.

The company is based in Dallas and has some 56,000 stores in 16 countries. During 2013, 7-Eleven stores generated total worldwide sales of close to $84.5 billion.