

USA: Shell gas stations to accept Chase Pay

Chase and Shell have signed a multi-year agreement that will see Shell gas stations in the United States accept Chase Pay.

Chase Pay is a payment service that lets Chase credit and debit customers pay at the pump, in stores, online and within an app.

The two companies expect Chase Pay to transform the Shell customer payment and loyalty experience by enabling a mobile payment solution and driving the Fuel Rewards program participation.

“Adding Chase Pay to the multiple payment methods Shell accepts will deliver a simplified, differentiated and personalized customer experience while driving loyalty,” said Craig Schneider, Shell GM and Vice President of Retail Marketing North America.

Shell is the largest fuel retailer in the United States while Chase is the largest U.S. credit card issuer based on loans outstanding. Chase customers have more than 90 million consumer credit and debit card accounts, and nearly 24 million actively use the award-winning Chase Mobile app.

“As industry leaders, we will work together to change how consumers purchase fuel, ultimately driving more brand loyalty,” said Jennifer Roberts, President of Strategic Alliances and Loyalty Solutions for Chase.