

Leighton O'Brien appoints experienced account executive for North America

Scott Thrash, former COO of Titan Cloud Software, will be in charge of boosting the North American operations.

Leighton O'Brien, a leading fuel software and field technologies company, has appointed Scot Thrash to the newly developed position of Account Executive for North America to support further growth across Leighton O'Brien's wetstock and field technologies operations.

Thrash will drive client relationships and execute strategy across Leighton O'Brien's wetstock management, tank and line testing, pre-bury post-bury testing and fuel cleaning operations to drive revenue and increase market share, according to the company.

"It's the right time to bring in an experienced executive given Leighton O'Brien now has the country's largest tank cleaning coverage," said Greg Salverson, President of Wetstock International.

He has previously been vice president and chief operating officer at Titan Cloud Software where he developed and executed corporate-wide SaaS environmental compliance management solutions.

He has also consulted to the EPA of Ghana on operational and environmental strategies that leverage technology to streamline compliance.