

Guyana: GuyOil announces legal actions over fuel quality accusations

The Guyana Oil Company Limited (GuyOil) rejects reports questioning the quality of its fuel in relation to an article published by the Guyana Times.

Guyana Oil categorically rejected the conjecture contained in an article published by the Guayan Times and has since assured customers that their fuel “is subjected to rigorous quality control tests and is certified to have met all required specifications.”

Contrary to the claims made by the Guyana Times’s article “Questions Mount over quality of GuyOil fuel”, published on 9 February, the company has said in a statement that it has not received any reports from its customers or franchise holders indicating issues in the operation of their vehicles as a result of fuel purchased from its service stations.

GuyOil has instructed its lawyers to begin a legal action against the editors and publisher of the Guyana Times for the accusation leveled against the company.
