

Mexico: Shell enters Colima state with new stations

The global oil company already operates in nine of Mexico's 32 states.

Shell inaugurates its first gas station in the Mexican state of Colima as it continues to expand across the country.

The new opening adds to the 150 sites currently operating in the states of Puebla, Querétaro, Guanajuato, Hidalgo, Jalisco, Coahuila, Aguascalientes, Estado de México and Ciudad de México.

Users in Colima will be able to fuel up using Shell V-Power, Shell Super, Shell Diesel and Pennzoil lubricant.

"Our products are used by consumers all over the world and we are pleased that Mexicans have access to them today, regardless of whether your car is in the pits or in one of our service stations near your home. Visitors to our stations can be assured that they will have products of the highest quality and that are specially designed for the best performance of their cars," said Rafael Ayala, District Manager for Shell Mexico.

Shell said it is committed to training its service specialists in safety, product and customer service, ensuring that they serve consumers in a personalised manner.