

Argentina: Gulf to open three new sites

After the opening of its first station in Argentina just three weeks ago, Gulf will launch three new sites in Roldán, Córdoba and Monte Grande.

Following its successful break into the Argentine market three weeks ago with the opening of its first gas station, located at the crossroads of Directorio and White streets in the City of Buenos Aires, Gulf has announced the upcoming opening of three more gas stations.

These sites will be located in the town of Roldán, on a high-traffic neuralgic route; a second one in Córdoba; and the remaining one in Monte Grande, Province of Buenos Aires.

The openings will take place "between mid and late August," according to the oil company. The inaugurations will take place "between mid and late August," according to the oil company. Gulf's goal is to operate about 50 branded stations by the end of 2019, and around 150 within the next two years.

"The sites are highly visible places, which offer the possibility to attract many customers - both new and existing clients", company executives explained to surtidores.com.ar.

Gulf is optimistic about its growth prospects. Since it opened it rolled out in Argentina, the turnover of its brand has grown by 30%, as it has done the dispatch of CNG.

In this context, the company has announced an expansion plan targeted at new operators willing to join its fuel stations network.
