

Argentina: Voy con Energía offers financial support to its operators

The oil company decided provide financial support that will last until May due to the complex situation that gas stations are experiencing due to the coronavirus crisis.

The oil company Voy con Energía has announced a series of measures to help service stations after the obligatory isolation and social prevention measures established by the Argentine government in the fight against the coronavirus.

Among the most important measures is the possibility of financing and offering dynamic payments for the purchase of fuel. The line of credit could be up to 45 days, according to the company.

"In view of this situation we have launched financing lines and forms of payment according to these special circumstances, given the situation of the country and the activity of our network operators," Osvaldo Valsangiacomo, commercial manager of Voy con Energía, told surtidores.com.ar.

"We will adapt to the needs of each specific case, such as where it is located and what sales conditions it has", said Valsangiacomo.

Fuel sales at Voy con Energía's service stations have fallen between 50% and 80% since the government's COVID19 prevention measures came into effect, according to the company.
