

Implico Group and Aquarius Software partner in Latin America

The two groups join hands to drive the digitalization of the oil and gas industry in the southern continent.

The downstream IT experts Implico Group and Aquarius Software will collaborate on future-oriented automation and digitalization projects in Latin America. Their common aim is to guide downstream companies on their digital transformation journey and help them to make their supply chains fit for the future. The partners will implement innovative technology, such as the terminal management system OpenTAS, at their customers' sites.

Aquarius Software is headquartered in Sao Paulo, Brazil. Combining their deep know-how and experience, the two partners aspire to introduce their clients to the many benefits of digitalization, such as streamlined processes, increased transparency, better collaboration and more safety along the entire supply chain.

"Sharing similar aims and values, we look forward to drive digital transformation for oil and gas enterprises in Latin America together. In fact, we are already at it. The cooperation agreement has already been signed and the first implementation project is underway," lauds Thomas Roller, Head of Sales & Marketing at Implico Group.

Founded in 1984, Aquarius Software was born when a group of professionals identified a market opportunity and created a new business in software development.
