

Northwestern Spain supermarket, convenience store owner Gadisa opens six new Claudio Express shops

Gadisa, which owns supermarkets and convenience stores mainly in the northwestern region of Spain named Galicia, said in a statement issued near the end of May that it has expanded operations by opening six new Claudio Express shops.

The new stations will “add proximity “ to clients and improve service because the locations were designed to “offer easy access and comfort to make a basic purchase fast.”

The company is owned by Grupo Galuresa. The six openings follow three other separate inaugurations “of this line of service” during 2015.

Claudio is the franchise of Gadisa with 138 points of sale in Galicia, Castilla and Leon.
