

Cali car wash operates by donations

An auto detailing and window cleaning company in Long Beach, California has a unique way of charging for its services--customers pay based on what they think the services given were worth, according to a release.

Martin's Mobile Auto Detailing & Window Washing, founded by Anthony Martin, assures excellent service and customer satisfaction.

"After the car detailing is complete, or after the home, office or vehicle windows are washed, the company only requests a donation from its customers commensurate with the value of the service received," said the release.

"As a one-man service, I was dedicated to ensuring that each and every vehicle received a thorough cleaning with flawless results," added Martin.

The company also washes home, office, or vehicle windows.

It is also plans to hire more employees and purchase new trucks.

"After many personal ups and downs, I've built my auto detailing business based on dedication and hard work and (I) want to create a legacy for my family," added Martin.

Martin thanked the assistance he got from the Ask Sharifah Community, an online business community founded by award winning Business Consultant and Online Marketing Specialist Sharifah Hardie. It implements a Return to Work Program, which extends various types of assistance to individuals for them to get a job or put up a business.
