

Mexico: BP opens six new stations in Campeche

The international oil company continues to expand its fuelling network across Mexico with more openings.

British Petroleum announced the opening of six new sites in Mexico representing a step forward in their plans to reach a network of 1,500 sites in 2021.

Oil giant BP has opened added six new stations to its growing network in Mexico. The new locations are all in the state of Campeche – the British fuel retailer now covers 50% of the country's territory.

Álvaro Granada, Managing Director of Fuels BP Mexico, explained how in a year and a half the company had opened 300 sites, were present in 17 of the 31 states and now receive 500,000 daily clients.
